((Subject)) Realising the same right to the world – Checking the leading media

Dear ...

The New York Times is considered a leading publication. Brilliantly reflecting what people do... In the world as we know it.

But is it also up to a bigger challenge: Reflecting the NEWEST options?

Namely: The potential of the web to realise, for the first time in history, every humans same right to the world?

PROJECT HUGO shows how to end today's violation of the same right to the world; how to replace it with a proper exchange-system for areas with all their resources and opportunities.

So there's a sensational opportunity for a more just and more efficient world.
AND AN IMPORTANT ROLE FOR ATTENTIVE MEDIA:

As a rights system, the new possibility isn't advanced by companies like commercial products. And as an exchange-system directly among all humans, it isn't taken care of by conventional institutions.

It's NEW stuff, calling for NEW information, NEW orientation, NEW dynamics.

From August 2015, PROJECT HUGO publicly documents what exemplary media have to say about the new possibility to realise the same right to the world thanks to the web.

When will the news be NEW?

A world novelty... Concerning everyone by its very nature... Enhancing the material situation of most readers and viewers... Setting a basis for credible peace... One should think that's news worth spreading.

However, the media didn't manage to bring up the subject so far. No stories about the greater possibilities of the web. Nothing about the new opportunity to realise everyone's same right to the world.

It's easier to show pictures of starving children or drowning refugees than picturing a system that would change most of that.

Tragically, by not seeing the newest opportunity in the media, most people don't realise it's there. Even worse: Most take the absence as "proof" that something new "isn't possible anyway".

CHECKING THE LEADING MEDIA fills this vacuum. Starting by showing it:

While the possibility to realise the same right to the world via web is there, the number of articles / broadcasts about it is zero. (Other than rare hints on Hugo in an early stage)

A sample of internationally distributed or referred to newspapers, magazines, tv stations clearly indicates this. Since media are eager to write the same as the others, one can assume that it's zero as a whole.

CHECKING THE LEADING MEDIA starts with today's dinos... But if others are faster and more attentive than those with the biggest resources, welcome to proof it!

At the end of the day, it's about who's REALLY leading. Who's really up to NEW news:

Who's leading in making people understand which problems disappear and which chances arise when economy and world order are put on a proper bases? Let's see!
